
Eric J. Crossen, M.D., M.P.H.

Philosophy of Care

Dr. Crossen strives for effective communication with patients and families. He believes that children and adolescents receive the best care when physicians prioritize relationships with patients and their families. He seeks to understand his patients' and families' perspectives in order to partner with them in making medical decisions, forming care plans, and providing advice.

Clinical Interests

Dr. Crossen is a general pediatrician offering primary care for children and adolescents. He has a special interest in newborn care.

Research/Academic Interests

Dr. Crossen is very active in the medical education of Pediatric residents and UC Davis medical students. For UC Davis School of Medicine he is co-Instructor of Record for the third-year Pediatrics Clerkship and Director of Tribal Health Programs. He regularly lectures for medical students on topics in General Pediatrics. He routinely hosts medical students in his primary care clinic where he teaches clinical skills at the bedside. He supervises Pediatric Residents in their continuity clinics and teaches in the resident didactic series focusing on communication skills and bedside manner.
