Your health care home base

As members of a university organization that studies how to improve health care, we know how important it is to understand your perspective, concerns, ideas and expectations — as well as your symptoms.

Whether your personal focus is reducing stress, staying active, aging gracefully or managing a chronic condition, our primary care providers are here to help.

A focus on listening

UC Davis Health primary care clinics have earned the Patient-Centered Medical Home designation from the nonprofit National Committee for Quality Assurance (NCQA).

The “medical home” is a model that involves:

- Shared decision-making with you
- A more structured, teamwork-based approach to coordinating your care
- Strong communication among all of your health providers

This support allows your personal doctor to spend more time listening to you and getting to the heart of your health goals and challenges.

Personalized care

Our focus on patient-centered care is grounded in our own longstanding research about the importance of human interaction in medicine.

For example, UC Davis studies have found that physicians who have more personalized discussions with patients, and encourage them to take a more active role in their own care, can help to lower medical costs and reduce the need for some services.

A welcoming, culturally sensitive environment

UC Davis Health is a recognized leader in diversity, inclusion, and LGBTQ healthcare equality. We're proud to offer a welcoming environment and culturally sensitive care to patients of all races, ethnicities, gender identities, sexual orientations, ages, religions, languages and abilities.

Many UC Davis primary care providers, nurses and staff members are bilingual or multilingual, and select interpreting services are available at primary care locations throughout the region.

We're proud to offer a welcoming environment and culturally sensitive care to patients of all races, ethnicities, gender identities, sexual orientations, ages, religions, languages and abilities.

Language and interpreting services

To find a physician who speaks your preferred language:

- Use the “Find a Doctor” tool online and search for your desired language in the languages field.
- You can also call the office of your choice and ask if they have physicians who speak your language and are currently accepting new patients.
- Or call our Consumer Resource Center at 800-2-UCDAVIS (800-282-3284), where certified interpreters are available as needed.

Interpreting services can be provided in-person in select locations, as well as over the phone or by video conference.

Many insurance plans accepted

UC Davis Health accepts many major health insurance plans, including HMO and PPO/standard insurance plans. For the latest list, please visit our website at ChooseHealth.ucdavis.edu.

- If your health insurance plan includes UC Davis Health or UC Davis Medical Group but you are currently assigned to another medical group, your plan may allow you to switch anytime.
- If your plan does not include UC Davis Health, you may want to consider switching health plans during your employer’s open enrollment period, the annual window for benefit changes.
- If UC Davis Health is not part of your insurance provider’s network of primary care doctors and specialists, the type of insurance you have may result in additional fees to see an “out-of-network” provider. For example, if you are in a managed care plan, you may be responsible for the cost of an exam or procedure by an out-of-network physician.

Choose and start soon! Talk to your health insurance provider about your options if you would like to see a UC Davis Health primary care doctor or specialist.

An entire team of experts behind you

When needed, your UC Davis Health primary care provider can connect you with renowned UC Davis Health specialists on the leading edge of innovation and discovery in more than 150 areas of health care — meaning that you can be among the first to benefit from the latest care strategies.

A center for knowledge and discovery

Academic health centers such as UC Davis Health include a teaching hospital and a physician practice group, associated with major medical and health professional schools. They conduct research to discover new and improved treatments for patients, and also train the next generation of health care professionals.

UC Davis has trained many of the top physicians in our region and across California.

Unique advantages for patients

Because we're at the forefront of scientific development, academic health centers provide a distinctive brand of high-quality patient care informed by the latest science and medical insights.

Unique advantages for patients include access to:

- New treatments and cures
- Help for the most complex and severe conditions
- State-of-the-art technologies
- Leading experts in their fields

Nationally ranked expertise

UC Davis Health is the region's only health system to offer expertise nationally ranked by U.S. News & World Report across a variety of medical fields. UC Davis Medical Center and UC Davis Children's Hospital routinely rank among the nation's best in the publication's annual "Best Hospitals" surveys. The medical center has also earned Magnet® nursing recognition, the nation's highest form of recognition for nursing excellence.

Clinical trials

As the region's academic health system, we conduct hundreds of research studies at any time with the goal of bringing new, effective and safe treatments to patients more quickly. This includes voluntary clinical research studies or "clinical trials," which are at the heart of all medical advances. They help generate evidence to evaluate new treatments, determine best practices, and compare alternatives.

Clinical trials offer hope for many people, and an opportunity to help find better treatments for others in the future.

Resident-based clinics

As a center for learning and academics, we take pride in educating health leaders. Some of our primary care offices on the UC Davis Medical Center campus in Sacramento are teaching clinics, where patients receive care from a team of resident and faculty physicians.

- Primary care providers at these clinics are resident physicians — medical school graduates who are completing additional training in a medical specialty.
- Each resident is overseen by a board-certified faculty physician who will also review your care plan. In this way, you benefit from both experience and a fresh perspective.
- You can choose to select a resident physician for your care. Our residency program is routinely recognized nationally for excellence, and develops many top physicians in California.
