

Elisa K. Tong, M.D., M.A.

Clinical Interests

Elisa Tong is a general internist who helps take care of patients in the clinic and hospital settings. Her area of interest is in tobacco cessation and its cross-cutting impact on health and wellness for smokers and their families. Tobacco not only is an important risk factor for cancer and cardiopulmonary death and disease, its use can increase infections, worsen surgical healing, and affect the metabolism of medications.

The U.S. Surgeon General has also determined there is no safe level of smoke exposure for nonsmokers. Since tobacco is one of the most addictive substances, it can take at least 8-12 tries before a smoker can quit for good, but each try is a closer step to success. UCDMC offers tobacco cessation classes (livinghealthy.ucdavis.edu) and the California Smokers' Helpline at UC San Diego offers free telephone counseling and educational materials in different languages (www.nobutts.org).

Research/Academic Interests

Dr. Tong's research interests are in tobacco control policy and cessation, with special interests in secondhand smoke, diverse and underserved populations (particularly Asians), and health systems change.

She is the founding Project Director for "UC Quits", the UC-wide Tobacco Cessation Network across the 5 UC medical centers that has used the electronic medical record to help address tobacco at every clinical encounter and connect with the California Smokers' Helpline at UCSD. She has also worked on tobacco cessation interventions targeting community college students, Medi-Cal members, and Chinese smokers living with household nonsmokers.
